THE REFUGEE PROBLEM

"Eleven thousand Jewish emigrants, men, women and children, are stranded in the various ports and cities of Europe, dependent entirely for their subsistence on the help which they may receive from their relatives in the United States," according to Mr. B. C. Vladick, manager of the Jewish Daily Forward and member of the American Hias Delegation which has recently returned from Europe.

Six thousand of this number possess Russian passports and have already secured American visas. They are located in the ports of Southampton, Marseilles, Havre, Cherbourg, Bremen, Hamburg, Riga, Constantinople, and in the cities of Warsaw, Kisheneff, Goltz and Bucharest.

The investigation made by the Hias Delegation revealed a most pitiful situation among the refugees stranded in Rumania, Latvia and Poland. They lack food and shelter and are dressed in rags. Their entire existence depends on the help of their relatives in America, but they receive very little from either relatives or the relief organizations. A large number of the emigrants are housed by the steamship companies which undertook to bring them to the United States.

The governments of the various countries where the Jewish emigrants are stranded have given assurances that they will not deport them, pending their departure for Argentina and Canada, and such other countries that will give these refugees a harbor of shelter. Particular consideration has been shown by the government of France which has agreed, according to Mr. Vladick to allow the skilled workers among the refugees to be absorbed into the industrial fabric of the country.

Mr. Vladick also observed the interesting fact that out of 800 refugees stranded in Southampton, faced with the alternative of waiting indefinitely for permission to go to the United States or proceeding immediately to Palestine, considerably less than one hundred chose the latter.

The situation of these 11,000 Jewish refugees in such a serious plight scattered in the various parts of Europe offers a challenge to the Jews of the world.

What are we going to do about it?

Canadian government which graciously allowed us to bring 5,000 of these refugees into Canada. With the help of the I.C.A. in Paris which has already expended over one hundred thousand dollars in transportation alone, some 1,800 of these refugees are already living in Canada, scattered from Montreal to Vancouver and some of these have located on the I.C.A. farms near Winnipeg. 800 more are expected to arrive within thirty days. The basis of division of these immigrants has been 40 per cent. for Montreal, 30 per cent. for Toronto and Ontario, and 30 per cent. for Winnipeg and the West. In practically every Jewish center in Canada there are committees which look after these immigrants on their arrival, place them in homes and maintain them until such times as they become self-supporting. From the point of view of quality the immigrants who have already been brought here are assets to the different communities in which they have been settled. Most of them become self-supporting in from six weeks to two months. They adjust readily to their new surroundings. One of the gratifying incidents in working with them occurred recently. Hearing that a new group was due in a few days a committee of immigrants who had arrived with the former groups called at the local Emergency Immigrant Aid office and presented a petition to be allowed to take some of the new refugees to their homes until they could be established. This is only one indication of the type of people these immigrants represent. They have a spirit of independence and initiative which is laudable. Canadian Jewry has demonstrated a magnificent spirit in this work. They have approached the work not as charity but as mutual aid.

Canada is able to absorb 2,000 more of these immigrants within the remainder of the year, provided the Jews of the United States come to their assistance.

The task is a peculiar one. It does not end when these refugees come to Canada. It merely begins then. We have pledged ourselves to the government that these people are never to become a public charge. Though the bulk of the families become self-supporting in a short while, the widows and children must from the very nature of their case remain a charge on the Jewish communities to which they are sent, for quite a while. The widowed mothers must be kept with their orphan children instead of being separated. It is not in accord with our present standard of social service to send the mother to work and put her children in an orphan's home. It is false economy from a communal standpoint, as well as detrimental to mother and children. It is but natural also that some dread diseases as tuberculosis and other ailments which attack people with lowered physical resistance. These cases are costly to care for. It is no mean item of expense to furnish up homes for these families, all of whom come penniless and in tatters. Though the Jewish communities of Canada have done nobly, contributing funds for this work, we do not believe that the saturation point has as yet been reached. Canadian Jews should take a particular pride in being allowed the "Zechiah"—privilege to demonstrate their sense of Jewish responsibility. But after this has been said and done, it should in fairness also be stated, that the Jews of Canada who have received permission to bring 5,000 refugees, have bitten off a larger bite than they can chew. The financial liability which the problem presents will amount to about $200,000. This is far beyond the means of the 125,000 Jews of Canada in these times of depression to raise even if they strain themselves to their maximum capacities. It must be borne in mind that a goodly number of the refugees brought out will remain burdens on the local Federations of Philanthropies for several years to come, and these agencies are now suffering from too many demands and too little money to adequately meet the local needs.

The problem is in fact an international Jewish problem and not one for Canadian Jewry alone to solve. It is an act of Providence that Canada has opened its doors to many of these refugees when the doors of the United States and England are closed. It therefore behooves the Jews of these countries to assist financially those communities that are in a position to absorb the refugees, but are financially unable to care for the whole problem.

Through the good offices of the American Hias and the American Jewish Congress there has come to Canada a total of $30,000 to date.

This is but a drop in the bucket when one considers that out of these funds the inland transportation from Halifax to the various communities must be paid as well as sums for food for the refugees in transit.

The I.C.A. of Paris feels that it has done more than its duty when it paid for the ocean transportation of 1,500 of the refugees. Those now sent must pay their own transportation, those without funds remain stranded. It should therefore be understood by the Jews of America and we are addressing ourselves principally to the special Emergency Committee recently formed in New York—that unless funds are promptly forthcoming it will be almost impossible for the Jews of Canada to continue the noble work of receiving

Two years ago the Jewish Tribune inaugurated its comic supplement by conducting a contest which would determine by popular vote who were the twelve greatest Jews in America. Last year it did the same in its anxiety to discover the twelve greatest Jews in the world. This year it wants to know who are the twelve greatest Jewish women in America that are making a lasting contribution to Jewish life. There have already been some funny results.

The answers to former contests revealed that by "great" the contributors must certainly have meant "notorious" or "well-known," since few of the names sent in represented even the edge of the fringe of greatness, if such people as Einstein and Madame Curie are called great for their contributions. This new contest takes its place auspiciously beside the other two with the name of Nazimova, the actress, who not long since gave out an interview on how she had always hated the Jews and her Jewish origin, and so had become Catholic. If contributors to this contest can single her out for her contribution to Jewish life, how won't they wrap the cloak of greatness about their favourite Council of Jewish Women committee members and Zionist women conveners in the hinterland.

In its announcement of this new circulation builder, the Tribune serves much refreshment in the way of soothing syrup to the woman whose only sphere is in the home. The paper hints that others may select for their lists of the twelve greatest Jewish women in America those who have gained fame, but deep down in the Tribune's heart there is first place for the woman who is at home, not just housekeeping, but home-building. It says that upon this woman the salvation of the race depends, even while others are expressing themselves in social work, arts, letters or what-nots.

This is a very nice way for the Tribune to announce such a silly, trivial eye-catcher as its latest contest and to ingratiate itself with the women readers it reaches. It makes up a little in our estimation for having the contest at all. This rather furtive glorification of the woman who works without public praise is a suggestion to those organizations in Israel concerned with the development of future generations of race-conscious Jews. Let them centre propaganda around the development of mothers capable of solving the Jewish educational problem. If competent motherhood is what the Jewish race needs most, let the profession of home making be placed alongside other professions in their glory. Then the woman who gives to the world well born, well-reared children may feel that her contribution is considered at least as valuable as a picture painted or a book written.

This woman is our invisible candidate to head all lists the Tribune gets, the capable Jewish woman anywhere who realizes that her mentality and strength can best serve the race in the job of bringing up children intelligently, educating them and spiritualizing homes for them. It is this woman, often renouncing her own talents in order to develop those of her children, who is making a contribution, not only to Jewish life, but to all life which will be evident when Nazimova has gone, and when the writings of a Fanny Hurst or an Edna Ferber have been forgotten.

JEWISH MEMBERS OF SCHOOL COMMISSION HOLD MEETINGS

The Jewish members of the School Commission, Michael Hirsch, Samuel W. Cohen and Joseph Schubert, have called three meetings for the purpose of hearing the views of any organizations, congregations, societies or individuals with respect to the problems involved in the school situation in the City of Montreal. Ald. Joseph Schubert presided at the first meeting of the series, which was held in the Technical High School, Sherbrooke Street, on August 28, at 7:45 p.m. The majority of the speakers were in favour of maintaining the status quo, with these modifications, namely: that Jews be given a proportionate representation on the School Board; that Jews be given positions on the staffs of both public and high schools; and that the conscience clause be observed.

Among those who spoke of maintaining the status quo with certain changes were Capt. Sebag Montefiore of the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, Rabbi Temkin of the Beth Israel Synagogue, Marcus M. Sperber, Israel Figler and Rabbi Solomon. H. Lozinski and Mr. Shechter spoke in favour of separate schools where Hebrew could be taught. Among others present were: Peter Bercovitch, Henry Weinfield, Rabbi Merritt, M. Dickstein, Rabbi de la Penha, A. J. Livingston, I. Charness, I. Diner, Adolph Gardner, Ben Bernstein, J. B. Miller, Muncey Fink, Hecht, Gross, and Misses Sarah Miller and Sallie Solomon.

Marcus M. Sperber urged the Commissioners to aspire to securing a national system of schools into which religion did not enter. This was not, he claimed, a problem to be solved only by Protestants, Catholics and Jewish; it was a national problem to be solved by the government.

Should the Commission try to get separate schools he stated that it would succeed only in setting up a wall of demarcation, sufficient in itself to send the Jewish race in this country back to where its forefathers started.

"After all," he continued, "there was only one place in the world for Jewish controlled schools, and that was in Palestine."

Michael Hirsch was called upon by the chairman to explain the object of these meetings.

The last two meetings of the series were held on Tuesday, September 2, and Wednesday, September 3, at 7:45 p.m., at the Technical High School.

JEWISH COMMUNITY COUNCIL

The Jewish Community Council, which met at the Baron de Hirsch Institute on Tuesday, August 26, decided not to accept the invitation of the Jewish members of the School Commission, to meet them for discussion at the Technical High School, on August 28. Another meeting of the Jewish Community Council was held on September 2, to discuss the school problem.

Professor Willstaetter, until recently of the University of Munich, and now Professor of Chemistry at Heidelberg, has discovered a new drug, which will be known under the name psikane. It is a narcotic like cocaine, but is superior in quality, and is free from the latter's injurious effects. Professor Willstaetter recently resigned from the University of Munich as a protest against the anti-Semitism prevailing there. Another prominent German scholar will resign his post as a protest against the spirit of anti-Semitism in the German universities. Following the resignation of the famous German chemist, Professor Willstaetter, from his post at the University of Munich, Professor Pflüger, professor of mathematics at the same University, declared that he would also resign for the same reason.

Squire Jake Levine, the "marrying magistrate" of Nashville, celebrated his eightieth birthday anniversary, Thursday night, June 26, as banquet guest of Bnai Brith Lodge of Nashville, Tenn. "You young brothers," he said, closing his speech, "you young brothers come down to my office, and I promise to marry you free of charge; but don't forget me six years from now when election comes around again." Squire Jake's address followed a number of others by members of Bnai Brith Lodge, which heaped such praise on his aged head that he thought it must be some one else under discussion. They called him "the man who made the Nashville Bnai Brith, and a respected citizen of the community, who has done much to make Judaism respected in Nashville." They spoke of him as a just and impartial magistrate, a leader of his creed and a citizen whose services for the community rank near the highest in Davidson county.

The New York Jewish Theological Seminary's Solomon Schechter Fund has been completed, which makes certain the establishment of the Chair of Theology in memory of the late Dr. Solomon Schechter, who at the time of his death a few years ago, was president of the Seminary.

REVIEW JUNIOR SECTION:

I would like to join the Cousin Family of the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW.

My name is _____

I live at _____

I am _____ years of age.

My dear cousins:

Rosh Hashonah, the beginning of a new year and of many good things. I hope, is almost upon us. I just wonder what we would do without beginnings for a new day, or a new lesson, a new thought, a new friend, a new book, a new place. All mean the beginning of something. And without that fresh beginning, I don't know where we would all be. Think of it! No new day, in which to start all over again, with pleasant thoughts and kind deeds to make up for the hastiness and thoughtlessness of the days that went before; no new thoughts and new hopes to make up for the laziness and lassitude that envelopes us all from time to time. Why it would be terrible! And so it behooves us to make the most of this new beginning. And since all our lives are more or less different it is up to each and every one of us to make the necessary changes in our routine that will help to make this Rosh Hashonah beginning a wise one. Perhaps some cousin is giving too much time to clubs and books, and not enough to her family; perhaps another is just letting away his time, without learning anything. We can each decide on something that needs to be changed. And while I am talking, I want to make a suggestion. I don't know how many of you are studying Hebrew, but I do think that you should all learn it. And so, suppose you make it a New Year's resolution to learn Hebrew, and to learn it well. Well enough, that is, to read it and write and talk it! For it you do, you'll find that a whole new world of people and books will open up before you. And in understanding this new world you will learn to understand love and respect your own people and yourself.

Cousin David.

MAIL BAG

Dear Cousin Judith:

Sorry to have kept you waiting for an answer. Since I wrote you last I have been down to Toronto and back. I spent nearly 3 weeks with my friend Sue Goldstein. We're Toronto, who is also a cousin of yours. I live on a farm about 11 miles from Hamilton, near the Dundas Provincial Highway. The name of our village is Farley. As I wish to make your acquaintance, the next time you motor from Toronto to Hamilton, which I suppose you do, kindly pay me a visit. I will take you for a stroll in the woods, which you say you love. We have 47 acres of them, also a lovely creek. I am enclosing a story for the competition. I hope I am not too late for same.

I remain,

Your Country Cousin,
Pearl J. Gardstein.

Dear Pearl:

Your competition story came too late for the prize, which is too bad, for I heartily endorse your notion of a pleasant holiday. Won't you please send your next competition entry in very early? Forty-seven acres seems ever so large a stretch to me. Have you an orchard too? Because if you have, I think I'll just have to commandeer a magic carpet and whisk myself your-wards! Thank you most awfully for your invitation. I have never been out your way, but... who knows? I have just returned from a visit in the country, and we spent some of the pleasantest of pleasant hours drifting along a very narrow, very crooked creek that joined two lakes. Is your creek anything like that one, I wonder? Do write more about your home and your woods. Just last week, while we were strolling through the woods, I found a little plant that I'd never seen before. It was about six inches high, and had three quite hardy leaves, not unlike those of a rubber plant, and three berries, about the size of a cherry, but of the most beautiful Prussian blue. I wonder whether you know what the plant is called?

And now I must leave you. But do write more about yourself. Is your friend, who is my cousin, going to write to us soon? I'd like her to!

Cousin Judith.

Dear Cousin Judith:

Lying in a hammock under a gigantic weeping willow tree, while the sun's warm rays fall through the branches in golden strands, I write to you. We are staying at the farm for the month of August and I like it very much, for the beauty and the simplicity appeal to me. Nearly every day that passes leaves in my mind the remembrance of its beauty. I can't decide whether I like the morning, the afternoon or the night best.

I wake up early in the morning and from my bed (which is close to the window) I look out and wait for the sunrise. Gradually the darkness fades and slowly the sun rises. The beauty and the splendour dazzle me and the whole world seems to stand still, while into my heart creeps a strange reverence and awe for the beautiful spectacle I am beholding. With the coming of the sun life awakens and I steal outside. The dew is fresh on flowers and grass, the air is fresh and sweet, the birds are beginning to sing, several roosters crow majestically as they announce the new day; all is alive. I steal back into the house and back to bed for another hour or two.

Each afternoon is different, but the one I am going to tell you about makes one feel so lazy.

Just imagine! A hot summer afternoon. The sun is very hot, scarcely a breeze, a patch of clover, bees droning as they hurry from flower to flower. Two trees, their branches entwining, a hammock swung between them and that hammock, so inviting.

After a beautiful sunset and a quiet evening comes night. Night, calm and beautiful, and the moon, calm, cold and serene travels around in the heavens while the stars, so bright, are twinkling.

Cousin Judith, its wonderful!

I have written so much already that I can't start telling about New York in this letter but will in another.

An Revoir,

Fanny Fleming.

Dear Fanny:

Are you sure that it was you and not I, in that hammock that sunny afternoon? I wonder! Because you've described just the sort of days I've lazied through so delightfully. We (which means the Three-Of-Us, have enjoyed your letter so much. Won't you try to write more regularly? Do

Cousin Judith.

And let's have another "Book Discussion."

HOW I WOULD LIKE TO SPEND MY SUMMER

As I have spent the last three summers in the country, I would love to spend this summer abroad. First I would visit the Empire Exhibition at Wembley Park, England. To see all through the various buildings it would take at least one week. I think I would have to spend a full day looking at the Queen's doll house. From Wembley Park I would next visit Sherwood Forest at Nottingham, where Robin Hood and his merry band were. As Paris is not very far off, that would be the next place, see all the sights; then Berlin and after that Palestine. At the last place I would stay a month and then take the ship for home, so as to be ready once more for school, which opens September 3rd.

BOOK DISCUSSION NOOK

Do you remember, dear cousins, that we planned to have a separate little corner in which we could talk about the books that we had read? This week we have an article on David Copperfield, by Charles Dickens, which was written by Fannie Fleming. I would like to have a review of some book each week, so cousins all, suppose you, each and every one, let me have an article right away.

For the world is so full of all sorts of books,

We could each fill not one, but a hundred book nooks!

DAVID COPPERFIELD

The story of David Copperfield is one that awakens many different emotions. When I read the story strangely enough it made me think of that immortal music selection, Humoresque, which is so strange, for beneath the happy gay melody one notices a certain vein of sadness and it is this, I think, which corresponds to the story of David Copperfield, for even when David is happy and gay there seems to be a tinge of sadness to his happiness, and even when David is sad there seems to be a tinge of humour to his sadness. I noticed this especially when David, on his way to boarding school, stops at the inn and is imposed upon by the waiter. This incident made me feel so strange! I wanted to laugh at his unworldliness and at the same time I wanted to cry when I thought of that lonely, sad, trusting little lad being imposed upon.

You, who have read the story of David Copperfield, I wonder if you felt the same way about it as I did, and you who have not read it, read it and see if you agree with me.

By Fanny Fleming.

"WHEN I AM KING"

With the Prince of Wales on his way to Canada, many stories are being printed in the papers about him. He is a popular young man, and no wonder, for isn't he just like one of the princes in our old fairy tales? At least, so one would think to look at pictures of his smiling, cheery face. Many stories are also told of the Prince when he was a child. Mme. Blanche Marchesi, the eminent singer and teacher, tells one tale about him in her book, "Singer's Pilgrimage." She was at a royal tea party and after telling of her pleasure in holding the young Prince, then about two and a half years old, on her knee, she writes:

"He seems, as a child, to have said the most delightful things, of which several came to my ears, and the one I remember and cherish the most was when he was asked, 'What will you do when you are king?' and he answered—quite a little mite he was—'When I am king there will be in my country no sin, no bearing-reins for horses, and no puppies' tails cut.'"

Worthy of a true prince, isn't it?

FOR YOU TO SOLVE

How the money goes.—I know two sisters who have found it an agreeable plan to pool their allowance and do their shopping together.

On one of their recent visits to the stores, Martha bought a hat and pair shoes for $15. Then Gertrude paid as much for a blouse as Martha did for her hat and invested the remainder of their money in a parasol.

On the homeward trip, Gertrude, who had been thinking over a remark of Martha's about her blouse costing as much as Martha's hat, called attention to the fact of Martha's shoes having cost one dollar more than Gertrude's parasol, and suggested that if they had apportioned their blouse and shoe money so that Gertrude's blouse would have cost half as much more than Martha's shoes, they each would have spent the same amount of money.

From the facts recounted, who can figure out the exact prices of their various purchases?

POETS' CORNER

THE FLOWERED GOWN

I wish that I could find my gown
With printed roses up and down
And rose-pink ribbon made to tie
In wide bows like a butterfly.
It had a kerchief of white lace,
With ribbon at the starting place
To mark the beating girl-heart, lit
With gay unwisdom under it,
And ruffles, very crisp and wide,
With lace upon the underside.

I could put out my hand at night
And find it in its place aright
Between my leghorn on the wall,
And mother's heirloom China shawl,
Behind the cherry closet door.
In the blue room on the third floor;
But that the room's at such a height
It would be hard to reach to night
There are two flights of stairs to climb,
And seven weary years of time.

—Margaret Widdener.

HIDE AND SEEK—A POEM FOR CHILDREN

Wonder what's the secret reason—
Bud-time, snow-time, any season,
In their homelands everywhere,
Wooly-head and Golden-hair,
Yellow-skin and Rosy cheek—
Children play at hide and seek!

Hide and seek. The whole world plays,
Birds and bunnies hide their ways,
Rainbows peep through melting rains,
Sun-motes dance down dusty lanes,
Underleaves, wildflower covers
Little face from little lovers.

Sometimes, though it's strange and odd,
Hearts play hide and seek with God.
From the Little Delicator.

Sixty Jewish emigrants from Poland who have been stranded for some time in Vienna and have found it impossible to obtain their visas for Palestine, have decided to proceed to Spain to settle there. The Spanish Consulate in Vienna has given them free visas. Other emigrants here are thinking of following their example, but fear that they may be sent as part of a Labour Corps from Spain to Morocco to join the Foreign Legion fighting against the Riffs.

Serious objection has been raised to the building of the St. Louis United Hebrew Congregation's projected new synagogue on a site purchased in Ellenwood, a restricted subdivision. The protest is signed by Jewish and non-Jewish residents of the locality. A meeting of the protesting organizations was held at the City Club and action taken to bar the erection of the synagogue because of its reported institutional activities, which, the residents assert, will affect the district detrimentally.

The Jewish Boys' Club, 218 Simcoe Street, is the latest activity to be financed by the Federation. This club is the outgrowth of the Jewish Boys in Training (J.B.I.T.) organized in 1921 by M. M. Cohen, then statistician of the Toronto Boy Life Council, which had completed a survey of the school boys of Toronto in relation to the church and club.

It was found that while seventy-five per cent. of Protestant boys were associated with some form of club activities, less than thirty-seven per cent. of the Jewish boys were so connected and, of these, two-thirds belonged to Christian organizations.

The J.B.I.T., modelled along the lines of the Canadian Standard of Efficiency Tests of the National Boy's Work Board, aims to develop the character of the boy by the "four-fold programme" of devotional, intellectual, social and physical work. It recognizes that the instincts of the boy for self-expression, natural and necessary to his normal development, if wisely directed produce the best in manhood—but if perverted yield the antisocial or delinquent child.

To satisfy and direct these instincts the boys of the J.B.I.T. are organized into small self-governing clubs under trained leaders. These leaders form the Mentors' Club of the J.B.I.T. They are instructed in "boyology" and trained as boy leaders.

In 1922 anxiety was caused by the growth of delinquency among Jewish boys, which reached double their former proportion. Then the Mentor's Club agreed to co-operate with the big brother movement. Although the delinquent boys call but for a small portion of the Club's efforts, in two years' time the number of first offenders has fallen 59 per cent.; total cases in court 70 per cent.; repeaters 82 per cent.

Until 1923 the J.B.I.T. met mostly in public schools. When the Jewish Children's Home moved to their new quarters on Annette Street the Federation offered to transfer the Simcoe Street building to a boys' club providing the money could be raised to renovate it. This was undertaken by N. F. Nathanson. The result is the present Jewish Boys' Club.

Here the boys have assembly rooms, game rooms, shower baths, a library (the gift of the Bnai Brith) with a weekly circulation of two hundred volumes, a billiard room (equipped and maintained by Percy Hermant) and a toy craft studio. It has a membership of seven hundred and a weekly attendance of six hundred and a branch at the Junction, meeting at the Strathcona School.

There is a thoroughly Jewish ritual at the opening of meetings, and at the investiture of new members bible stories. The boys have parliamentary practices, debates, oratorical contests, encouragement in wholesome reading and hobbies. In the toy craft studio, artistic toys are being made and sold, the proceeds divided between the club and the boys producing them. The boys are required to bank the money earned.

Physical development is encouraged by inter-club leagues of baseball, basket ball, volley ball, hockey; by boxing, wrestling and track work. The boys are taught personal cleanliness and regularity of habits.

In both intellectual and athletic activities the boys compete with other communal centres and have distinguished themselves by winning first and second prizes in the Y.M.C.A. community boys' contest in oratory; championship in the Y.M.C.A. basket ball league; Telegram's baseball bantam team, and Y.M.C.A. baseball 90-lb. class; second in Y.M.C.A. basket ball and Telegram's baseball Tyro team; third in the Y.M.C.A. baseball 105-lb. class.

The Pantages A.B.C. group, under the auspices of N. F. Nathanson, is composed of boys acquiring a certain percentage of marks in attendance, behaviour and cleanliness, who are treated to the Pantages and an ice cream supper afterwards. Last June two hundred boys qualified. The boys lack a gymnasium. At present that of the Harbord Street Collegiate is used but is in no way satisfactory so that many boys associate themselves with Christian Clubs for the sake of gymnasium privileges.

The present executive committee of the Boys' Club, elected Thursday by the Board of Governors, is: Harold Levi, chairman; Lawrence Kert, vice-chairman; Elly Marks, treasurer; M. E. Williams, secretary and director of club; M. M. Cohen, director of the training of mentors; Martin Cohen, president of the Mentor's Club; Mr. Lyons, director of athletic activities; Joseph A. Woolf, executive director, Federation of Jewish Philanthropies.

desperate straits in Europe to-day. It should be the duty of American Jewry to bring out those who are stranded in Europe without funds or the prospects of funds from American relatives. These deserve our first consideration.

There is another suggestion in this connection which we desire to make. Many of these refugees have relatives and friends in the United States who are able to assist them. We would therefore recommend to agencies like Hias, the I.C.A. and the U.S.A. Emergency Committee that these American relatives and friends wherever and whenever possible should be communicated with, and requested to deposit a sum of one hundred dollars. This money should be sent to the Canadian Jewish Immigration Society, which could transfer it to the community to which the refugee family is destined, this money to be kept until the refugee family arrives and used by the organization to establish the family and tide them over the adjustment period. This amount will by no means be adequate to defray all the needs of the family, but in addition to what the local organization will supply, the family can be put on its feet without being a terrible strain on the local committees. There are numerous instances in Toronto where the committee has expended from $300 to $400 in cash on individual families and few cases have cost the committee less than $50. This does not include furniture, clothing, groceries and medical aid, etc. If the local committees can be relieved from large expenditures in individual cases, they could afford to absorb a much larger number than they can under the present conditions.

It has been our experience that once the family is here the relatives and friends become "cold" and indifferent, realizing that even without their assistance the immigrants will be looked after by the Canadian Committees.

The whole matter involves certain problems of internal management, such as establishing the proper relationship between the Canadian I.C.A. and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Society, the question of organizing a national campaign among Canadian Jews for large sums toward this work—but these are secondary to the main issue of securing the proper assistance from the Jews of America toward this great cause.

The Jews of Canada will anxiously await the return of Mr. Lyon Cohen, of Montreal, who, as president of the Canadian I.C.A. is largely responsible for having secured permission from the Canadian Government to bring 5,000 immigrants into our country. He is investigating conditions at first hand and interviewing the Paris I.C.A. From him we hope to secure a message that will hearten and stimulate Canadian Jewry to redoubled effort in behalf of their unfortunate brethren in Europe.

It behooves every Jew whose lot has fallen in pleasanter places to feel that so long as the status of the Jews in Europe is abnormal, the responsibility is ours to help them. The work of bringing these refugees to Canada is merely a continuation of the war relief—with this difference: The Jews of United States and Canada collected since 1914 the colossal sum of $68,000,000 which was sent into Europe for Jewish relief work. The effects were in the nature of pouring water into a sieve. Whereas the money now being expended to bring these war victims to Canada will bring permanent and worthwhile results, which consists not merely in saving lives but in enriching our own cultural Jewish community life by the influx of these people.

School Week

"This week more than 80,000 girls and boys answer the summons to resume study in the Toronto Public Schools. Every intelligent parent wants his or her child to receive an education. A sound mind and a sound body mean everything.

Our City can claim a large number of wonderfully modern school-buildings with more being built. Provision has been made in some schools for milk to be served to undernourished children.

This is a grand work. But the need remains for every child to drink at least a quart a day at home—regularly.

The charming lady behind the footlights is so often regarded by the vast multitude of work-a-day men and women as a creature belonging to a different world, a world in which cares and worries have no place. Because she belongs to playland, she is viewed as being untouched by the realities of life. "Is it little wonder then that she plays her part so gracefully?" the men and women reason as they saunter out of the portals of the theatre into the world of stern fact and cruel truths.

Ah, but how far apart are the things we think from the things that actually are! So it is not at all strange, then, that the vivacious lady who has captured our hearts by her gay spirits and her flow of rich, wholesome humor, should have, too, shared with the rest of the mortals the dark side of life.

Thus it came to pass that Belle Baker, the actress, whose name has become a household word from coast to coast, first saw the light of day in a dingy room in the sordid tenement house on 72 Orchard Street. But for her sweet voice she was no different than hundreds of other Jewish baby girls born that year on the East Side. She was the third child in the Baker family. Her lot was destined even to be harder than that of some of the others. For at the age of nine the little girl who was later to bring laughter and cheer to men and women everywhere, had to leave school, and go to the factory. For there was a very sick mother at home and a family of eight children. But Belle was only able to remain a short time in any particular factory. She would sing at her work and her singing would keep the girls from working, and so she would lose her job and go to another factory.

Finally she drifted to the Jewish music halls of the East Side. At first she sang in the Canon Street Music Hall, Yiddish and English songs. And there the surname of Blosser was changed to Baker. Two dollars a week was the sum she received then. Often she would draw her salary weeks in advance so that the sick mother could be sent to the country. As a rule, fifty cents would be taken off every week from the two dollars to pay back the debt. For a year and a half the child sang in the music halls. Then, one day, Jacob Adler saw her. He remembered her. And when he put on Jacob Gordon's play, "Homeless," he had Belle Baker take the part of the little boy. One year she remained with Adler. It was a big year for the fourteen-year old child. Suddenly the castle of dreams began to tumble. The actors union refused to let her play grownup parts. Back to the gaudy music halls Belle Baker, the childish mind troubled by the injustice of things and the little heart heavy with the turn fate had taken.

A few years passed. And then again a manager came to the music hall. This time it was a man from the Keith Circuit. "Would she come and sing for Keith's at a salary of two hundred dollars a week?" he asked her as soon as he was able to see her back stage. The girl gasped. Another big moment had come into her life. That was eleven years ago.

Today when I saw her in her luxurious apartment on 92nd Street, right off Broadway, I found an exquisitely attired young woman singing a lullaby to a twenty-two month old baby. It was my privilege to see the woman and not the actress. It was twilight, and here, amidst lovely and peaceful surroundings was the mother spending the last minutes of the day with her baby. These moments were doubly precious, for soon the artist would come to the fore. The mother would have to leave the little one to answer the insistent call of the footlights. Into such a scene I was reluctant to bring a foreign note. Here was neither the time nor the place to speak of the stage. The hour belonged not to Belle Baker, the actress, but to Mrs. Maurice Abrahams, the individual of private life, and to little Herbert the son. And so we chatted about the baby.

"I owe much to my baby," the mother said. And the big, warm, brown eyes directed their gaze upon the dozing child. "Baby has given a new and a different quality to my voice. It has given it more soul and depth. My love for my little son has taught me to love all babies now. No, I don't want my son when he grows up to go into the profession. I want him to be a business man. But whatever he wants to be, he will be, regardless of what I say." Then the nurse came to take the sleeping child. The mood changed. I now felt that I had the right to ask the questions I had come to ask.

"Well," Belle Baker smiled brightly and understandingly. "I am all attention now. What is it? I suppose you would like to know to what I attribute my success. I know that is one of the questions I shall have to answer either now or later," she taunted. And then she proceeded to answer her self-put question.

"It was hard work, very hard work, that brought me to where I am now. It is partly to that I attribute my success, and partly to the fact that I have always been true to my folks. Doing the right thing by your people and working hard will get you anywhere. Of course you must have something to give. You must also have the courage and the power to impel people to listen to what you have to say. I am a firm believer in God and predestined order of things. I feel that God intends that we should go through so much in life. And it was this belief that buoyed me up when things were blackest for me. I never gave up hope. And I am sure had I not gone through what I did, I would never have been what I am today. It is the differences in experiences that make of us such different individuals.

"The one episode that started me, and ushered in a whole series of events, was the incident I now like to refer to as the dress and apron affair. I was just approaching my ninth birthday when one teacher in school one day asked me to bring my mother. But my mother can't speak English," I told her.

"Then bring your father," she said.

"My father can't speak English either, but I have a big brother who can. I'll bring him if you want me to. So I brought my big brother who was then fourteen.

"I heard my teacher tell my brother, 'Your sister needs a new dress and a new apron. After that nothing could make me go back to school. I was determined to earn money somehow, so that I could have a nice, new, clean dress and apron, and so that my sisters after me could have nice dresses when they went to school. I went to the factory. But I could not stand long in any one place because I insisted upon singing. So I went to the music halls. There is one incident belonging to those days that I shall never forget. I was in desperate need of money. My mother was away in the country, sick. I told my troubles to my friend Betty Treidler. My chum had a little gold jacket and, without saying a word to me, she pawned and gave me the money the next day. This little girl is now known to the Yiddish theatre-going public as Betty Jacob. Although I was so very poor,

EMPIRE THEATRE

"Jimmie Cooper's Revue," which comes to the Empire Theatre week of September 8, is a burlesque production that merits the highest praise. The company is headed by Jimmie himself, supported by Jack Reddy, former Keith vaudeville favourite; Jean Vernon, pretty prima donna, also formerly of vaudeville; Harry Myers and Helen Davis, likewise from the Keith circuit; Midgie Gibbons, well-known soubrette, and Dolph Singer, son of the famous Jack Singer.

This is supplemented by a jazzy coloured troupe, Elhart's elephants, from Ringling Brothers Circus and the Eight Pashas, a big Arabian acrobatic act.

Last, but by no means least, there is a chorus of eighteen "Nell Brinkley Girls"—maids whose dancing and singing will captivate the most hard-boiled "first nighters." Matinees will be given as usual.

More and more as the policy of Columbia Burlesque is maintained in the local field, the theatre going public is learning that the taint of reproach has been removed from the term "burlesque" as applied to the Columbia Wheel. Patronage by the entire family has replaced the turnouts of "men only" that largely marked the existence of old-fashioned "burlesque." Times have, indeed, changed in all strata of life, and "Columbia Burlesque" is truly a radical change from former conditions in burlesque.

SHEA'S

George Choos' Fables of 1924 is the headline attraction at Shea's Theatre next week. It is a musical extravaganza. Featured in the cast are Jack Henry and Edythe Mave, and with these two clever principals are Mildred Burns, Bob Sargent and as clever a quintette as ever played together. Then for good measure Mr. Choos has added "The Toyland Steppers," a group of dancers who work as one. The music of "Fables of 1924" was written by Walter L. Rosemont, and the dialogue by Earl MacBoyle. The dances were staged by John L. Hughes.

A little team of vaudeville singing and dancing comedians came unheralded into New York a short time ago. They were announced as Ryan and Lee, and not much attention was paid to them until they opened. The became over night the vaudeville hit of New York.

Glenn and Jenkins are a pair of comedians who have brought the railroad porter into fame as a stage character, and through their superior capability as masters they succeed in making "Working for the Railroad" one of the best travesties to be found in the theatre. Judson Cole is absolutely a comparing comedian. He gives a fine demonstration of the fact that the hand can be quicker than the eye, but his fears of visualizing deception are cloaked in good humor.

Hal Berg and Jack English, who call themselves "Two Dark Horses of the Screen," were for three years the authentic screen doubles of Harold Lloyd and Souh Pollard. Frank Albright and Eleanor Hart, two bright lights from Broadway, are popular singers of popular songs. Humorous logic on the subject of divorce will be dealt by Billy Miller, the comedian, in a sketch entitled "The Sign Post."

E. and Jay McGee and Shea's News Review complete the bill.

Playing a round of golf Sunday morning, Max Winokur, 57 years old, prominent in Jewish charitable work, suffered a heart attack, dying at the clubhouse before the arrival of his family, who were summoned by the police. He was playing a twosome with another member of the club and did not complain of any illness until the two had finished the fourth hole. Just as Mr. Winokur was about to drive off at the fifth hole the club dropped from his hand and he fell over unconscious on the green. Winokur expired in the arms of one of the club members just before the arrival of his wife and two sons, who rushed to the country club when notified of his illness.

the kind, generous act of my friend made me happy and gave me courage to fight life's struggle.

"There is still another incident that stands out from those far-off days. Dora Weissman was then in the habit of giving an annual concert and ball for her club on the East Side. I decided that I was going to sing at one of these concerts. I trailed Dora Weissman from the theatre to her home, and asked her whether she would let me sing at her concert. After hearing me she said she would. And with a happy heart I left her home to buy a white dress. Dora Weissman is now Barney Bernard's sister-in-law.

"It is only natural that my experiences should have left some trace upon my work. I realize the sufferings every immigrant Jew has to go through. I started with bits of dialect and songs typifying the rich life of the ghetto. I also sang negro folk songs. 'Lovely Joe' was the first song I sang at Keith's.

It was Belle Baker who was the first to sing 'Eli, Eli' in vaudeville. And now copies of that song with her picture on the cover grace Jewish homes throughout the country. Into that song she pours all the fervour of her being. She gives it life and body. Her voice brings out all its lights and shadows. It is the daughter of Israel that is singing thus. And it matters little where she is singing, be it in metropolitan New York, in staid, intellectual Boston, or in a western mining town, audiences always cry out at the end of the programme for 'Eli, Eli.' Her rendition of the song impresses the Gentile as well as the Jew. While singing in Boston she received this letter from a Gentile lawyer:

"Belle Baker:

Will you be kind enough to give me the name of the song with which you finished your programme on Thursday night. It was apparently a lamentation of some sort and the words were in a foreign language—unfamiliar to me. I shall appreciate your kindness in letting me know what it was, very much. It was one of the most impressive things I have ever heard.

Sincerely,

R. M. Packard."

"Oh! But it is much harder to stay on the top than it is to get there," Belle Baker suddenly remarked. And I thought I discerned a note of weariness creeping into the lovely voice. "I am always planning to give my audiences something new and something better. And then there are those long, long hours of practicing. Nothing pleases me more than when I am pleasing my audiences. I always think of the people in the audience as my guests. I try to entertain them and make them happy and comfortable as I would guests in my own home. I make them feel at home with me. I am at all times myself."

"How long have you been taking singing lessons," I asked. "You said something about practicing."

Belle Baker uttered a gay, little laugh. "Why I never took a singing lesson in my life until three years ago. I inherited my voice from my father who had a very sweet singing voice. I am now studying under Lazar Samoiloff."

There is a surprising freshness about the acting of Belle Baker. She does exceedingly well in character parts. There is no end to her versatility. One minute she is an Italian flower girl, the next, after a few seconds back stage in which she has changed her costume, she emerges as an East Side girl, a complete changed personality. She has all the characteristics of the East Side girl; she speaks her language, she walks her walk. Why even her face seems to have undergone a change. Her swift turn from one type to another takes one's breath away. And about it all there is a sparkle and a dash. She is teeming with vitality. She carries the whole show along with her. In fact she is the whole show.

An emotional strain permeates her acting, as is natural that it should, coming from Russian Jewish stock as she does. She grips her audience by her originality and daring. At times she can be daringly frank. But through all her jokes and jests there runs a kindly humour. She conceives it her duty to make people happy, and she will go to great lengths to make them so. Her full, rich voice is appealing and sweetly sympathetic. Her fine expressive face gives a certain piquancy to her entertainment. In a word she is individualistic. Nobody sings the songs she does, and even if they did, they could not put them over the way the incomparable Belle Baker does.

All her songs and comedy numbers are specially written for her. And there is a pleasing timeliness about them. Blanche Merrill, Harry Ruby, Bert Kalner and her husband, Maurice Abrahams, write most of her songs. Maurice Abrahams is a well-known song writer. The following are some of his best known songs: "Get Out and Get Under," "Hitchie Koo," "Red Rose," "When Grown-Up Ladies Act Like Babies," "You Made Me Forget How to Cry, Little Girl" and "Welcome, Stranger."

"Are the audiences of to-day any different from those you used to see in the beginning of your career?" I asked.

"Yes, there is a great difference. Now the audience wants to laugh, and it wants to be made to laugh. When I started out, ballads and rag-time songs were the rage. But in order to make it easy for my audience to laugh I have had to introduce more comedy numbers in my programmes. I think this state of mind is largely due to the aftermath of the war. How long it will last there is no telling."

We have seen Belle Baker, the mother, the actress, now for Belle Baker the Jewess. "I am a firm believer in Zionism," Belle Baker, the Jewess stated with a pretty, serious air. I believe that the Jewish people should have a home of their own. It is the one prayer our fathers have been saying through the centuries. I only wish I had the time to devote myself to Jewish activities. I leave that to my mother who belongs to more than twenty charitable societies of one kind or another. Two years ago when I was so dreadfully ill, I received a beautiful letter from the children of the Hebrew National Orphan House on Second Avenue. It was this letter that gave me the strength to fight my illness. The realization that hundreds of orphan children were praying for my recovery acted upon me as a tonic.

"What are the big moments of your busy life?"

"The biggest day of the week to me is the day when nurse goes out and leaves baby to me. I spend every minute of that precious day with my baby son. I even take him to the theatre and let him crawl around in the dressing room while I am doing up for my act."

And yet, little does the woman sitting in the orchestra thinking of her tiny son at home, dream that the gay, young creature on the stage whose every movement she is watching so intently, too, has a baby boy at home, and that perhaps the fascinating lady from her pedestal may be also wondering how the little one is.

The Religious Education Association, whose main office is at 398 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, at its recent convention offered three prizes for the best essays on what young people were thinking regarding the place of the church and its ministry. The contest is open to any group of young people of high school age. The conditions are given in a circular issued one of which is "The words synagogue and Sabbath may be substituted for the words church and Sunday." Just what the object of this may be is not clear. It would be interesting to know.

Pope Pius, having heard of the campaign inaugurated by the Catholic Women's Diocesan Clubs against immodest dress for women, has decided to offer a medal to the club evolving the most attractive, modest fashion in women's clothing. The contest for the medal is divided into two sections, a theoretical section, devoted to the best demonstration that immodest dress is really silly, barbaric and uncultivated, and a practical section, devoted to the actual designing of attractive fashions calculated to appeal to good taste.

A notable service was held in Honolulu, where 171 uniformed men, stationed in the Hawaiian Islands, celebrated Shabbath, as a result of the efforts of the Jewish Welfare Board's local representatives. In Washington services were held in the local synagogue for those who were able to attend, and special delicacies, in packages, were distributed among the disabled men in the hospitals. Similarly, 108 disabled veterans at Liberty and Otisville, New York, were visited by representatives of the Board.

The bill introduced by the Polish Government concerning the rights of the national minorities in Poland was passed by the Diet at its third reading, against the votes of the representatives of the national minorities. The law gives recognition to the languages of the White Russians, Ukrainians, Russians and Germans, for use in the courts, schools and government offices in the territories of the minorities. Yiddish is not among the minority languages which have been given recognition.

Mr. Moses Maimon, the distinguished Jewish painter, died recently in Leningrad, where he was acting as Professor of Art. A native of Wilkowsky, Moses Maimon studied art at Warsaw and Vilna. In 1880 he entered the Academy of Fine Arts in St. Petersburg, where he had a brilliant career. He painted several pictures dealing with Jewish life and Russian history, as well as a number of portraits, including those of the Czar and the Czarina and Dr. Chwolson. His best-known painting is the "Maranos," representing a wealthy Jewish family on Passover night, during the Inquisition period, who are surprised by the sudden entry of armed and masked men. This was later exhibited at St. Louis and then lost and, after search for it in America proved unavailing, Maimon also exhibited in London and painted there a number of portraits, including that of Abraham Dr. Gaster. Moses Maimon, who was in his sixty-fourth year, was a man of great personal charm, endowed with a keen sense of humour, and was a Hebrew scholar of no mean attainments. He leaves a widow and a daughter, his only son having died recently.

Pagoda Lake, in the eastern section of Forest Park, St. Louis, Mo., is again to have a bandstand, the gift of Hon. Nathan Frank, former congressman. The offer of a $50,000 building has been accepted by the Board of Public Service. The new concert stand will be called the Nathan Frank Band Stand and will be decorated with a bronze tablet bearing the name of the donor. It will be erected on a small island in the center of the lake, where the old Oriental pagoda stood years ago. Concerts were held there during the summer months on Sunday afternoons and Thursday evenings. It had to be tore down after when it became unsafe. The Jewish community of St. Louis is gratified to note this signal instance of the civic spirit of one of its ablest, foremost and distinguished leaders.

Miss Annie E. Landau, for many years headmistress of the Evelina de Rothschild Schools for Girls in Jerusalem, was invested by King George of England with the insignia of Member of the Order of the British Empire.
